This exhibit features stories, quotes, and photographs of the first generation of refugee and immigrant women from Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam, and Thailand living in the Washington, DC metropolitan area. The women address issues of identity, changing women's roles, the importance of helping others, and how they are passing on their values and cultural traditions to the next generation of hyphenated Asian Americans. The exhibit is based on an oral history and documentary photography project conducted by Lisa Falk and Uaporn Ang Robinson from 1990–1992.
